LOOKING BACK & CHARTING THE WAY FORWARD: USING THE GLOBAL CONSENSUS STATEMENT ON EXPANDING CONTRACEPTIVE CHOICE FOR YOUTH

A Summary of Survey Results

Introduction

Since 2015, the Global Consensus Statement—Expanding Contraceptive Choice for Adolescents and Youth to Include Long-Acting Reversible Contraception (LARC)—has sought to advance evidence, programs, and policies that contribute to providing a wide range of contraceptives to adolescents and youth. To date, 48 organizations have endorsed the Global Consensus Statement: 8 professional associations, 3 youth alliances, 32 implementing partners, and 5 who reported being either donors or “others.” The Expanded Method Choice for Youth Working Group is composed of organizations charged with advancing use of and support for the Global Consensus Statement. In early 2018, the Working Group distributed a survey to the 43 professional associations, youth alliances, and implementing partners that endorsed the Global Consensus Statement. Looking back over the past three years, the survey asked how the organizations had used the Global Consensus Statement as an advocacy tool. Looking forward, the survey asked the organizations how they intend to use the Global Consensus Statement in the future. The survey was also used to determine resources that organizations may need going forward to better use the Consensus Statement as an advocacy tool. The Evidence to Action Project, on behalf of the Working Group, has examined survey responses, and results of select questions are presented in this brief.
About the Survey

The Working Group distributed two separate versions of the survey: one to global organizations and one to regional and national offices of those global organizations. Both surveys consisted of three modules. Module I was the same for all respondents, asking about experience using the Global Consensus Statement over the past two years. Module II was composed of questions specific to the respondent’s organizational category: professional association, youth alliance, or implementing partner. Module III asked questions about how the organizations anticipated using of the Global Consensus Statement over the next two years and what resources might be helpful to using the tool effectively.

The survey was open for two months, from February-April 2018, and was sent to 43 organizations that have endorsed the Global Consensus Statement, 36 of which have national/regional offices. The survey to global organizations received 22 completed responses (41% of all recipients), with 4 organizations giving multiple responses. The survey to national/regional offices received 9 completed responses (23% of all recipients), with 2 organizations giving multiple responses. Of responses, most responses (around 90%) came from implementing partners. One global youth alliance and two professional organizations also responded. The global survey consisted of 26 questions, and the one to national/regional offices consisted of 24 questions. Of these, there were 7 questions that were identical in both surveys.

Top 3 responses:
- Advocating for and disseminating new research
- Developing an advocacy toolkit
- Providing additional references supporting full access, full choice to contraception for adolescents and youth

Organizations were asked how they had used the Global Consensus Statement as an advocacy tool.

Not many organizations responded to this question. Five organizations (global and regional/national) checked all of the available responses:

- To support implementation plans for youth-led reproductive health and family planning programs
- As an evidence-sharing tool at national meetings or in national technical working groups
- To revisit adolescent and youth sexual and reproductive health strategy to expand method choice to include LARC
- To include activities in work plans that expand method choice for adolescents to include LARCs
- As a reference or evidence-sharing in proposals or donor meetings
Conclusions

Survey results show that expanding method choice for youth to include LARC remained a priority area for endorsing organizations of the Global Consensus Statement over the past two years and will remain a priority going forward. Looking back, concerted efforts have been made to share the Global Consensus Statement, particularly among global organizations to national offices. Organizations have used the Global Consensus Statement for different types of advocacy at different levels: namely, policy and provider guidance revisions, and development of youth-led reproductive health and family planning programs. These are advocacy efforts which organizations plan to continue over the next two years. However, looking forward, several inhibiting factors, including lack of human and financial resources and lack of training on how to use the Global Consensus Statement as an advocacy tool, may prevent some organizations from progressing with planned advocacy efforts. The Expanding Method Choice for Youth Working Group can play a role in supporting endorsing organizations, particularly through the development of advocacy toolkit and further guidance on use of the Global Consensus Statement as an advocacy tool.
